INTRODUCTION

English is used by many people today and is one of the most useful languages in the history of the world. English is called the language of excellence. Although the number of English speakers is debatable, about 380 million people use English as their first language, while her over 500 million people who use English use it as a second language or I use it as an additional language. As a second language for communication without having a common linguistic or cultural background. So-called core English speakers are a minority due to the large number of English users and native speakers. This is because it is not specified how the language is used internationally. English is the universal language, many politicians use it in televised world conferences, and wherever you travel abroad you will see signs and advertisements in this language. Upon entering the restaurant you will be presented with an English menu. If you speak this powerful language wherever you go, you are not alone and will only benefit from this excellent language. Although English is not my native language, I certainly have a desire to learn and teach English to other students. English speakers are really successful and hopefully this language will allow them to come into contact with different people from different cultures who use this language. As the world changes, everyday English has new terms and forms. Will be used. English reflected many patterns of contact with other languages and changed communication to suit people's needs. English is also at the forefront of technology, scientific development, management, arts and literature, so it is being used more than ever before. The spread of English as a world language is due to two major historical events. The first historical event was the spread of British colonialism that led to English settlement in many parts of the world, and the second historical event was America in the 20th century, which was more important than Britain. , made this language English. A culture for all customers. As English rapidly develops complex relationships between communities and speakers of the world, there needs to be debates and positions related to the pedagogy, politics, politics and practice of English as a global language, Even sociolinguistic and sociopsychological complexities require new problems to expand and fix.

We mainly use qualitative and quantitative research methods by accessing corpus data of English, which is a world language, and English is rich in this aspect. To achieve the goal of this research proposal, we collect all data analysis on the above research topics and questions.

DISCUSSION AND RESULTS

English as a world language is spoken as a first, foreign and second language in many countries. In this sense we have English, Spanish, Hindi, Mandarin and Arabic which are the most spoken languages in the world. Although it is a language with many speakers, it cannot be called a global language or a popular language. In this case, English is the language of the world and is considered a language of excellence because it is used between people of different countries and between people of the same country. can be said with According to Crystal (1997), when a language is developed as a special role and recognized in all countries, it acquires global status, and this status can be either an official language or a special role for that language. Become. Prioritize learning English as a foreign or second language (70 countries have a special status, and many others prioritize learning English as a foreign language). Crystal (1997) postulates the rapidly growing role of English as a world language. According to him, there are about 320 to 380 million speakers in landlocked countries where English is the primary language. Abroad, such as India and Singapore, where English plays a global role, approximately 150 to 300 million speakers speak English as a second language. 100 million to 1 billion speakers. 570 million people speak English as a native language or as a native language. According to Crystal, no other language has spread around the world and become a global language as quickly as English. In any case, the number of speakers alone is not sufficient reason to designate a language as a world language. For example, Mandarin and English are he only one of the options for international exchange if this is a problem for his speakers, who are much more native than English. What does world language mean? Smith (1976) was one of the first to define the term international language, saying that it concerns communication between different countries. English is the primary foreign language taught in all schools in Europe, Asia, South America and Africa. English is widely spoken in the British Isles, United States, Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and many other parts of the United States and Great Britain. English is the official language of India, which has a population of over 1 billion people. There are also British-dominated areas such as Pakistan and Bangladesh where English continues to be used in schools and as an official language. There are several other countries that continue to learn French as a second language as it has become mainstream. English also influenced countries ruled by France. In the old Russian Soviet Union, Russian was the dominant language, but with the collapse of the Soviet Union, Asian countries rapidly adopted English as a foreign or second language in schools. English spread rapidly in Russia. and is growing in popularity as a second language. English is the cheapest second language in Japan. English is the preferred language of international trade.

CONCLUSION

In short, there is no question that English, which is developing all over the world, will eventually become the world language. All modern technology and systems use this language. There is a high probability that some deprecated languages will be replaced by full-fledged English.
